"Pigs might fly", believe it or not, is not a favoured exclamation amongst our Cyberswine team. It's generally used as an expression of incredulity - "that'll never happen", "no way man"... but not here.

Just getting the books out takes a bit to co-ordinate 'cos there's a few people involved with the character.

There's not just the artists and writers, but also his creators to consider. They've been using the character in other media projects which impacts on the regularity of the book and the consistency of the character. All the while the publishing side of Issue One Comics demands that we have more Cyberswine books out there.

It takes a bit to get this baby off the ground but there's little doubt in our collective consciousness that it'll take off (and just wait'll you see the in-flight movie!)

Now, at last, Issue One Comics can offer both Cyberswine and Zero Assassin in their very own monthly books and in FULL COLOUR!

My job as editor, now, is to ensure that you receive a consistently good book....

Actually the expression "pigs might fly" does come to mind!

DEALING WITH SWINE

c/o ISSUE ONE COMICS, Suite 616, 3 Smail Street,
Ultimo NSW 2007, Australia

Dear Autohead,

Great comic guys, I mean violence, mechanical parts, violence, blood, violence and great soundtracks. What more could a comic want except maybe more violence?

Cyberswine is seriously one of the best comics on the stands and until he gets beaten by the pink energizer bunny, it's on my must have list.

Is it true that Sega are making a Cyberswine video game, if so when will it be out? Yours,

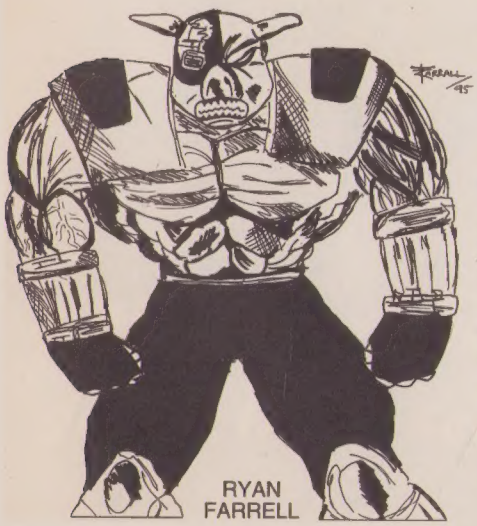
Brian Fardig,
Donnybrook WA

P.S. I suppose Nine Inch Nails - "March of the Pigs" is destined to be a soundtrack.

A Cyberswine video game?.....what a great idea!!

Dear Autohead,

I recently bought your1st issue of Cyberswine.



I think Paul Newell is a really good drawer and I liked the script written by yourself. I think "Issue One Comics" is one of the coolest comic companies in the world.

Lots of luck,
Ryan Farrall,
No address supplied.

Warning! Stories and art in the next issue of Cyberswine are so cool you'll get frostbite just looking at it!

To Issue One Comics (The Editor) ,

Firstly, let me say that the once poor situation with the comic industry in Australia is now looking very exciting now that we have the likes of you to bring us quality material at an affordable price. I used to have to rely on mainly British comics to satisfy my taste in comics but now I can read Aussie material who's sense of humour and way of thinking I can relate to. The characters are well designed with the attitude to match their abilities, my favourite being Cyberswine !

Thank you.
Richard Harrison,
Joondalup WA

And thank you, Richard!

Dear Issue One Comics,

My friend and I have got the no.1 issue of Cyberswine and we have been told that there is a 0 issue of Cyberswine. We have looked in all the comic book stores in our area and we are still unable to obtain the 0 issue of Cyberswine. The Cyberswine comic is great. Our friend in the comic shop said that we should write to you and ask if we could get two issues of the 0 Issue of Cyberswine.

Yours sincerely
Stephen Wemm and Lee Kirk, Ringwood VIC

There is indeed a Cyberswine #0. To order direct from us (or subscribe) you'll find details elsewhere in this issue. (Do it now!) And while you're at it, your friend in the comic shop can order Cyberswine through Blind Dog Distribution

To all you swines,

It was June 1994 when I started looking for this comic, hoping that this Issue One title will be out in time? Pigs arse! Now it is January and I nearly fainted when I found an issue at my local newsagent, but after reading No.0 I must say the Swine Crew has really brought home the bacon.

Sam's story was, if I am not mistaken a continuation of the Psycho Chicken story. Developing the issue of experimenting with cybernetics and in particular those that are subjected to the experiments. While I am used to the more amusing comical depictions of Cyberswine, the second story was a great example of this not to mention very enjoyable to read. The hard edged stories and characters are a refreshing change, but don't let these stories start to dominate.

The Chipmonk, Count Nosferamoo, together with the second appearance of Hairbutt and Brainbrat, now Brainbabe should ensure a reasonable mix of stories. Finally some suggestions for a title for the letters page are "Oink Blotts", "Piggy Tales", "Kosher cooking tips" and "Swine, women and Song".

Reasonably appreciative fan....

Peter King, Berkley NSW

PS: Was George named after Orwell?

Well spotted Peter! The Psycho Chicken did (and does) appear in the current storyline "Armoured Animals." Those who picked up the Cyberswine Special#1 and are now reading this issue should have realised that the Special stands alone and outside of the continuity begun in Cyberswine#0. Those who have not understood any of this....don't worry! Just buy the next issue. You'll get used to it!
